

QMASTOR opens new office in Denver, Colorado, USA to support global expansion

26th November, 2009,

QMASTOR (ASX:QML) Australia's leading bulk materials software development company, today announced the opening of a new office in Denver, Colorado, USA expanding the company's global footprint to further support and service key mining regions in North America.

This announcement follows on from the company's recent contract win to supply a comprehensive supply chain management system to metallurgical coal producer, Jim Walter Resources, based in Birmingham, Alabama.

Trent Bagnall, Managing Director of QMASTOR commented "There are significant opportunities for QMASTOR systems in both Canada and the USA and the establishment of a local office is an important step in our strategy to further enhance our presence in this region. The sales team has built a strong North American sales pipeline over the last 12 months and having a focused presence will help deliver results"

"Phil Ciezak will manage our North American operations. Phil, in his role as Business Development and Marketing Manager for our Australian operations, helped grow the company for the past three years and contributed to QMASTOR reporting record year end revenue and earnings growth. I am confident Phil and his team will leverage this prior success in the lucrative North American market"
